Left Behind

The Impact of Bush Administration Education Funding Shortfalls on Massachusetts Public Schools

> "We provide incentives and resources to make sure that failing schools have got the opportunity to meet standards."

> > President George W. Bush Boston Latin School January 8, 2002

Background

In January of 2002, President George W. Bush signed the landmark "No Child Left Behind" education reform act. The bill was the product of a bipartisan compromise based on a simple bargain: if schools promised to track results, the federal government would promise to provide resources.

For the first time, the federal government would require that states implement accountability measures to ensure "adequate yearly progress" for student achievement. In return, the federal government would strengthen its investment in public schools, especially the "Title I" program that provides extra resources for disadvantaged students. The bill set specific funding levels for future years.

Unfortunately, over the last three years, the Bush Administration has consistently under-funded its own education initiative, proposing budgets at funding levels well below the authorized amounts.

For example, this year, the Bush Administration's budget proposed $7.16 billion less for Title I programs than authorized by Congress. The Bush Administration has under-funded No Child Left Behind by more than $25 billion since the law's enactment.

As a result of this funding shortfall, school districts striving to achieve high standards for every child have lacked the resources to do so.

Prepared by the Office of Congressman Marty Meehan September 15, 2004 Last year, 256, of the 1,700 schools in Massachusetts (15%) were categorized as not reaching "adequate yearly progress." On September 7, 2004, Massachusetts Education Commissioner David Driscoll announced that this year, many more schools would receive that categorization. Many now face accountability measures, including possible state takeover.

This report, prepared by the office of Congressman Marty Meehan based on data provided by the nonpartisan Congressional Research Service, details the consequences of the Bush Administration's funding shortfalls for school districts in Massachusetts.

The report compares the amount each school district in Massachusetts would receive if "No Child" were funded at the authorized levels with the amount they actually received last year and stand to receive this year, based on President Bush's budget.

Findings

- In 2004, Massachusetts schools received 95,284,900 less in Title I funding than they would have had "No Child Left Behind" been funded at the authorized levels, including 9,982,400 for schools in the 5th Congressional District of Massachusetts.
- In 2005, Massachusetts schools stand to receive $ 116,922,000 less in Title I funding than they would if "No Child Left Behind" were to be funded at the authorized levels, including $12,171,300 for schools in the 5th District.
- The funding shortfalls for 2004-2005 for Massachusetts total $212,206,900, including $22,154,800 for Fifth District schools.
- The Lawrence school district receives the biggest funding shortfall in the 5th District, a combined $9,241,800 over 2004-2005.
- The Lowell schools are shortchanged $8,984,000 over the two-year period.
